- Words from Instructor -

We all know that multimedia is media that uses more than one form of information content and processing to deliver information to the audiences. When we think about forms for multimedia, we think of audio, graphics, text, animation, video, and interactivity. Almost everyone likes to interact with information that are expressed in colorful or multi-dimension media but is multimedia really benefit teaching and learning in either way? Will there any drawback if learners go astray by fancy media which are not so well-related to main topics? You might like to bear this question in mind while going through the module. Also, as a language teacher-to-be, what is multimedia for language teaching? What are the characteristics for different categories of language multimedia courseware? Think about these (questions)! Remember, the key to successful learning is: be an active learner and always think critically.
